- West Point High School Engineering Students Continue to Work to Solve Real World Problems Even in a New Learning Environment

Engineering students in Gabriela Gabaldon's class at West Point High School have been attempting to solve problems all year; after all, that is what engineers do - make things work! Just as all teacher's plans for the fourth quarter took a quick turn upon coming back from Spring Break, it was business as usual for these introductory Engineering students, only now they were faced with this new problem and it was one that the entire world continues to face...the need to protect oneself from the COVID-19 virus. Students were asked to draft designs that could support healthcare workers in preventing the spread of COVID-19. The pictures below show a student's paper/pencil draft as well as one that was developed further using SolidWorks software at home. What an engaging opportunity for the WPHS Dragons!
